

Eyler's Valley Chapel

Thurmont vicinity

Private

The Eyler's Valley Chapel is located at the intersection of Eyler Valley Road and Hampton Valley Road in Eyler's Valley, a mountainous area several miles northwest of Thurmont, Maryland. The main elevation faces east with the gable roofline oriented on an east-west axis. The chapel is adjoined by a cemetery several yards to the north. The building provides an example of vernacular church architecture in a mountain community dating from the mid-nineteenth century. It was initially affiliated with an evangelical Protestant sect, the United Brethren. A congregation continues to worship at the church to present-day.

7.1 Description:

The Eyler's Valley Chapel is located at the intersection of Eyler Valley Road and Hampton Valley Road in Eyler's Valley, a mountainous area several miles northwest of Thurmont, Maryland. The main elevation faces east with the gable roofline oriented on an east-west axis. The chapel is adjoined by a cemetery several yards to the north.

Constructed in 1857, the one and one-half story church is of stone construction with large stone quoining. The front gable roof is covered in standing seam metal. There is a boxed cornice with cornice returns. A german-sided belfry sits above the peak of the gable. It has a pyramidal roof with a pendant and a dentilled cornice. Arched openings have molding with a frame keystone decorated with a "bull's-eye". A interior end brick chimney sits on the ridgeline in the west gable end.

The main elevation, facing Hampton Valley Road, has two panelled side doors that are recessed with panels. Both doors have transoms and flat wooden lintels. A center 6/6 window is positioned above the doors and has a flat wooden lintel. A datestone is beneath the gable peak: Eyler's Valley Chapel, 1857. The west elevation has a center vent window beneath the peak and two 6/6 windows with flat wooden lintels. The south and north elevations are two bays in length with two 6/6 windows and flat wooden lintels.

8.1 Significance:

The Eyler's Valley Chapel provides an example of vernacular church architecture in a mountain community dating from the mid-nineteenth century. It was initially affiliated with an evangelical Protestant sect, the United Brethren. A congregation continues to worship at the church to present-day.

There are a small number of stone churches like Eyler's Valley Chapel that survive in Frederick County. One such example is St. John's Reformed Church (F-8-66), a one and one-half story stone building with a standing seam metal gable roof and a domed open belfry located in the town of Woodsboro which has undergone alterations to accomodate a growing congregation. By contrast, Eyler's Valley Chapel has sustained minimal changes and retained most of its original fabric. It is a good example in form and type.

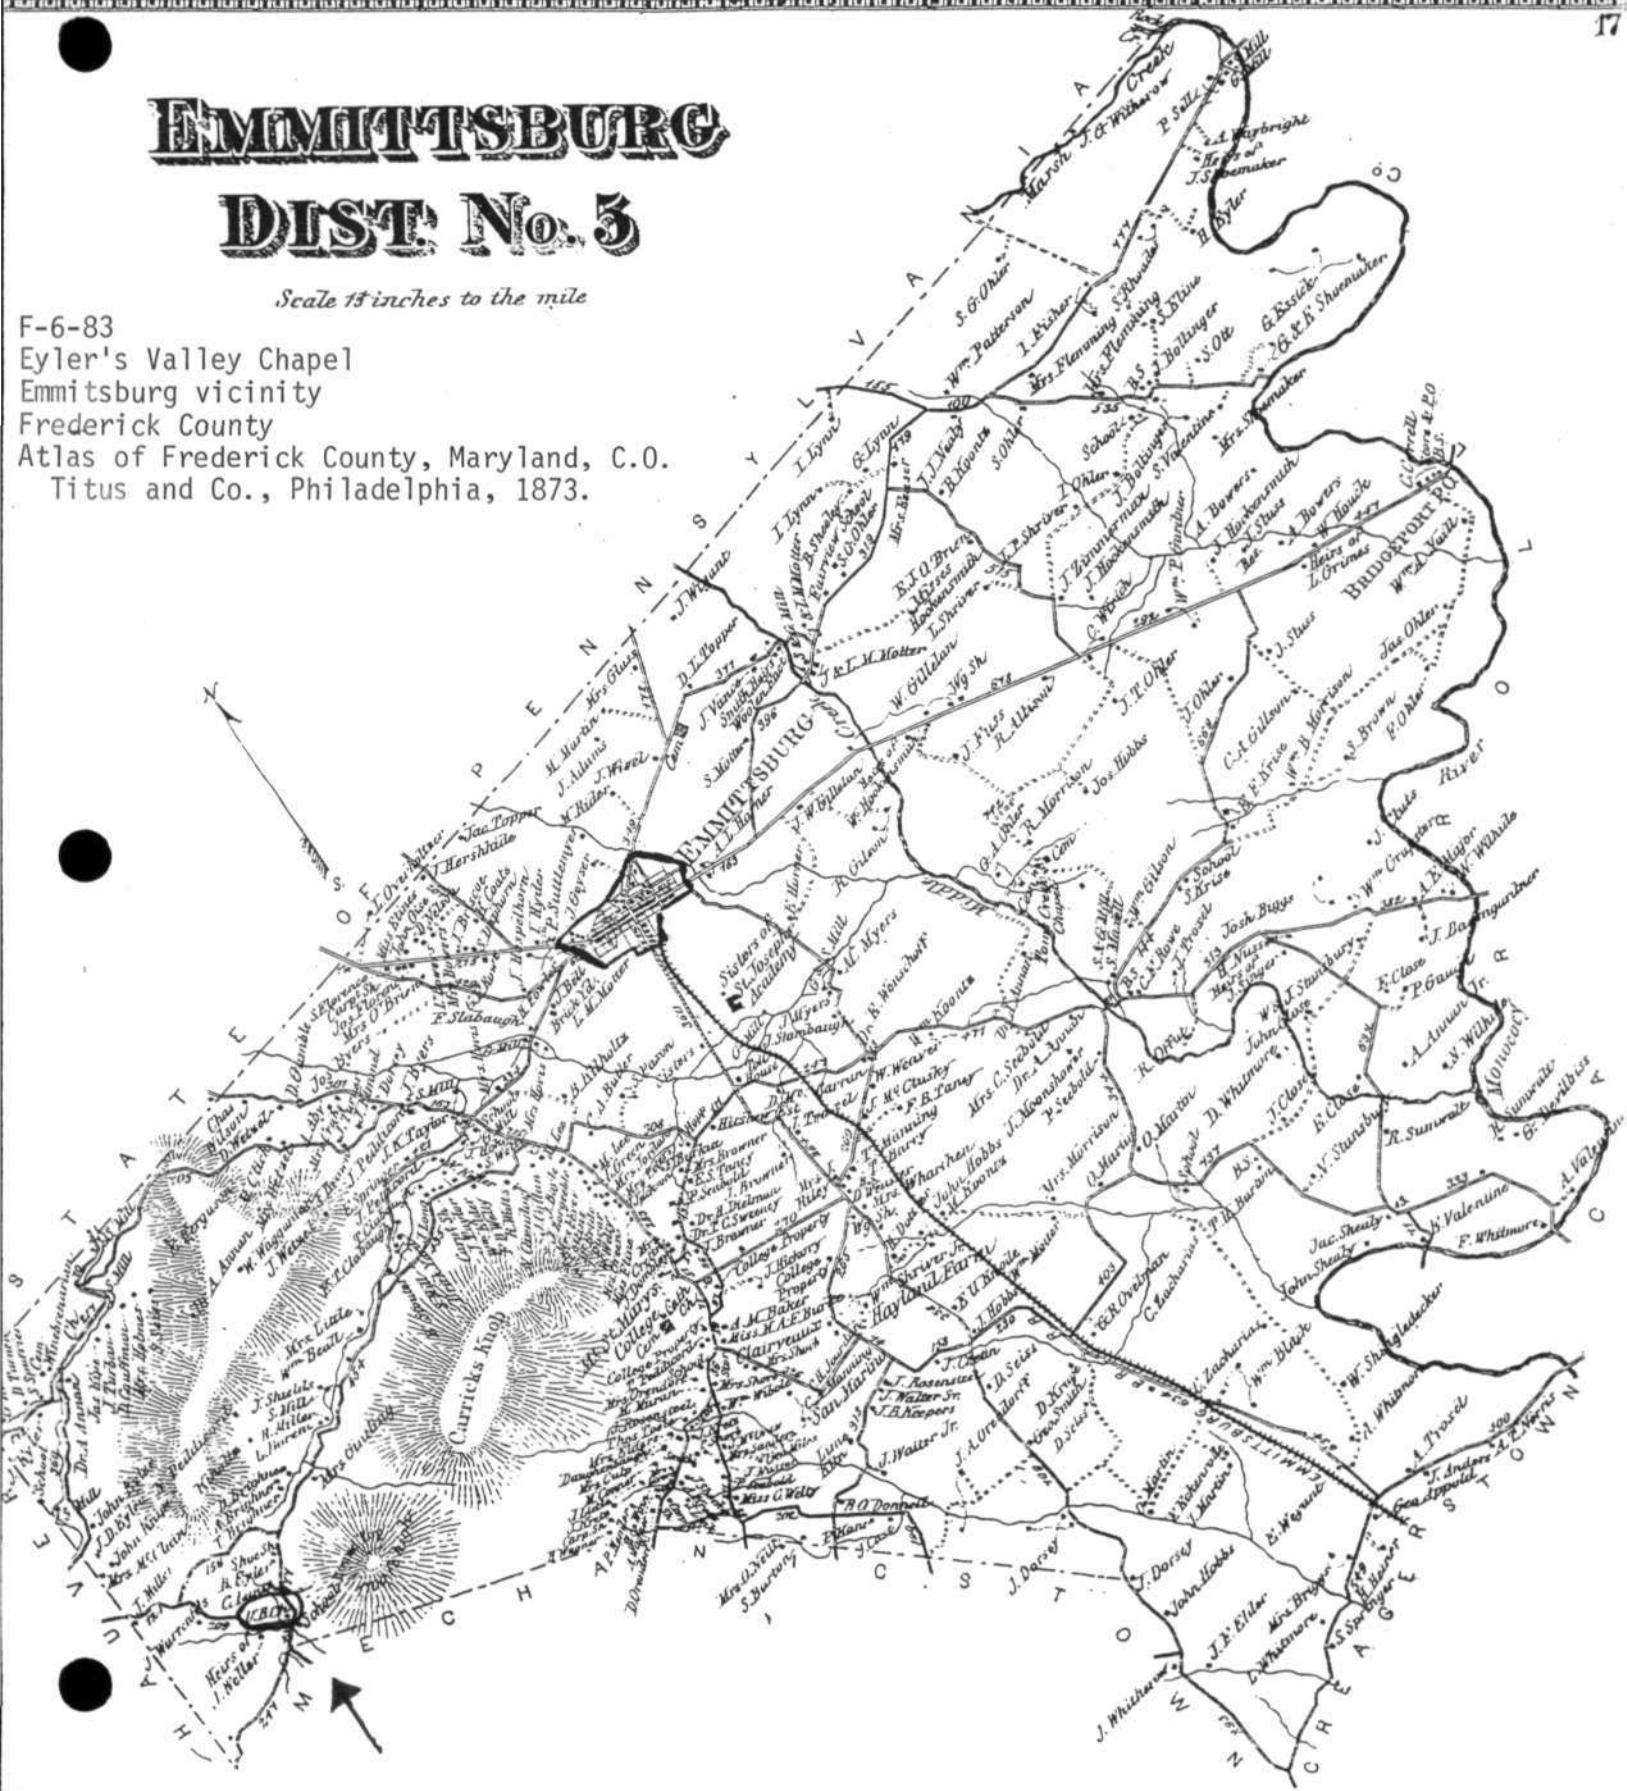

The church was originally named Eyler's Valley Chapel and later renamed Dodge Chapel after Mrs. Dodge, a prominent member (Williams, vol. I, 455). A number of United Brethren church buildings were constructed in Frederick County after the first conference of United Brethren leaders in 1800. (Before that time, services were held in barns and homes.) They varied in architectural construction; Eyler's Valley Chapel exemplifies the use of stone. Denominations borrowed building types from one another in constructing their churches: Eyler's Valley Chapel, a United Brethren church, closely resembles St. John's Reformed Church (1822), a German Reformed church.
